

EDITORIAL REMARKS

In This Issue

In a recent editorial (New Philosophy, Oct.-Dec. 1982) an appeal was made for studies in which the philosophic doctrines of the Word were extended into what may be broadly termed sociological thought and life. It is therefore gratifying that we have for publication, beginning with this issue, a series of articles under the title "Providence and Free Will in Human Actions" by the Rev. Daniel W. Goodenough. These studies, which explore the links between God and man at the primary level, provide the kind of basis necessary for a sound exploration of historical and sociological phenomena.

Dr. Berridge's treatment of the correspondences of the cardiovascular system with the Church Universal and Specific is an appropriate accompaniment to the Rev. Goodenough's series, for in it he draws our attention in a compelling manner to the fact of the influence of these Churches in the affairs of men.

Professor Allen continues his Notes in the series "Connected Whole." In this issue we present Installment X (Part a), which treats of an aspect of Swedenborg's ideas as they developed through the whole of the philosophical works.

An Appreciation

With the publication of Vol. LXXXV, No. 4 (Oct.-Dec. 1982) Mr. Kenneth Rose relinquished his position on the Editorial Board on account of the pressure of other work.

Mr. Rose has served the Association since 1960, and throughout the period performed the invaluable task of "Pasting up" the galleys of our journal in preparation for publication. This work was particularly important up to 1980 when the journal was published at Lancaster, PA

But perhaps of greater service has been Mr. Rose's indexing of the journal each three years. Indexing is an art which Mr. Rose has skillfully developed. For our last index published in the Oct.-Dec. 1982 issue, Mr. Rose served as consultant to Miss Lelia Howard who prepared the computer program used for the index. Mr. Rose has thus been instrumental in providing the Association with a program which can be used for years to come.

The Association therefore wishes to record its deep appreciation for all that Mr. Rose has done during the twenty-three years of his service on the Editorial Board.